A Reminiscence.

Once, when I was a little boy,
I sat me down to cry,
Because my little brother had
"The biggest piece of pie."

'Twas not but that I had enough,
But then I couldn't see
The reason why a partial nurse
Should give him more than me.

They said that I was a naughty boy,
But I have oft seen since,
Behave themselves as foolishly
As I behaved just then.

For we are often thankless for
Rich blessings, when we sigh
To think some lucky neighbor has
"The biggest piece of pie."

Benevolent Mr. Wixham.

At a meeting of the Detroit Ladies' Benevolent Society, held the other day, it was resolved that a committee of four ladies be appointed to canvass for donations, and in the course of the[ir] perambulations this committee dr[opped] into Mr. Wixham's office. He [receiv]ed them as a gentleman [should] after the usual formalities [were] began[?]

he lived at 36——street. He hadn't been washed or combed for a week, and I felt sad for him. I was going to take him home and feed him, but he slipped away."

Another woman suddenly looked out of the window, and her pulse ran up to one hundred and twenty a minute, but Wixham was as innocent as a lamb of any knowledge that it was her boy.

"Then you wont aid us?" queried the spokesman.

"Oh, yes, certainly I will. I was simply figuring to see how much I could spare. I signed a note with Mr.——last Fall, and I paid it yesterday. That makes me feel rather poor."

The third woman didn't turn red, but green, but Wixham couldn't have possibly have known that it was her husband.

"Let's see. Let's see. I want to give you all I can spare. Mr.——on——street, owes me four m[ore] ly, low ideals. But whatever a friend may not be, certainly that sweet and noble term is unmerited by one who, however generous in other directions, is selfish as himself.

Wit and Wisdom.

A faint pocketbook never won a fair lady.

Love, like fear, makes us believe everything.

There is no true manhood without independence.

That which we know, is little, that which we know not, is vast.

No man ever offended his own conscience, but that first or last it was revenged upon him for it.

There is not a Smith in the United States Senate, and yet that body is supposed to represent the people.
